

TOUR OF ITALY

in 94 pages

A scenic view of a rocky coastline with waves crashing against the shore under a cloudy sky. The foreground shows a sandy beach with several large, dark rocks. The water is a deep blue-green color, and the sky is overcast with grey clouds. In the background, there are rolling hills or mountains. The text is overlaid on a semi-transparent white box in the center of the image.

In this book, boats sail; the waves repeat their song; vine growers descend from the hills of Cinque Terre, on the Ligurian Riviera; fishermen pull their nets in the lagoon of Venice; carpenters build boats, just like they did yesterday... and once again, looking at them, we find ourselves outside of time. What is the Mediterranean? A thousand things at once. Not one landscape, but countless landscapes. Not one sea, but a succession of seas. Not one civilization, but a series of civilizations piled on top of each other. Traveling in the Mediterranean means encountering the Roman world in Lebanon, prehistory in Sardinia, Greek cities in Sicily, Arab presence in Spain, Turkish Islam in Yugoslavia... It means encountering ancient realities, still alive, alongside the ultra-modern... All of this is because the Mediterranean is an ancient crossroads. For millennia, everything has flowed into it, complicating and enriching its history.

Fernand Braudel, The Mediterranean.
The space, the history, the people, the traditions.

The beauty of major Italian cities lies, among other things, in the historical contrast: alongside monuments built by Roman emperors, you can find medieval castles, Renaissance palaces, stately homes, and religious buildings, all surrounded by recently constructed structures.

But large cities, as beautiful as they may be, often remain anonymous and can't convey the emotions tied to traditions that have been lost in the mists of time. To truly know and experience Italy, one must leave the paths marked by mass tourism and venture into the narrow streets of villages scattered in the mountains, perched on the coast, and scattered in the countryside, and... let oneself be enchanted!
